Overview

Anxiety disorders affect 40 million adults and one in eight children in the United States.*

They interfere with daily functioning and often lead to depression, substance abuse, suicide attempts and other disorders.

Depressive disorders affect about 19 million American adults.

More than 50 percent of people diagnosed with depression also have an anxiety disorder.

Coexisting anxiety and depression account for the most disabling mental health disorders in the United States.

We are coming out of a difficult period, with the COVID-19 pandemic, and we believe there are many innovative technologies that should be introduced in the healthcare industry and commercialized.
